Tom Burnette Publishing. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 124 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.3in. x 0.6in. Natures secret agents starts out when a man walking a timber boundary is ran out of the woods by an ape type creature thought to be a sasquatch. . . . Mystified and scared to death he tries to make friends with them by leaving out food for them. . . To his amazement they began to leave him small amounts of wild mushrooms and acorns. . . He is able to photograph the creatures, and they take him through a night marish hell through the next 10 years. Not understanding their ways or habits he stumbles trying to make friends with them. The dominant male does not like his activities and makes mock attacks when Brunette goes to feed. Not believing his eyes he sees the male one day and it is big as a horse, now he believes the giant prehistoric ape believed to be extinct is well and alive here in North Carolina. . . . and is flourishing with a social group of them. . . . Tom Brunettes keeps a well written journal of all his activities, and in the end of the book he finds a baby sasquatch or ape next to his dog feeding pan in his back yard. The baby had just been birthed and he takes it to the woods hoping his mother would return for the infant, she never did and he found the remains a couple of weeks later. . . . He sent the remains to a dna research facility and is still waiting for the results, so far after eight months the dna strains have not been traceable to any known species. . . This book is a true story...
