Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Notes on Supply The system of supply of the military forces of the United States is now in a state of change. Much of the old red tape and difficult routine is being eliminated and in its place there is being established a business-like method of getting supplies to troops when and where needed. The supply departments are making a real effort to do their part. If they are to be successful the intelligent cooperation of line officers must be secured. As must always be the case when extensive changes are made in a great system, misunderstandings and mistakes will occur. A determined effort on the part of officers of the line to comply with all instructions and regulations, even those for which they see no need, will reduce these difficulties to a minimum. The supply officers must arrange for many contingencies. In order that the supply system may be general and not degenerate into a mass of regulations for special cases, certain requirements, the necessity for which is not at first apparent, are necessary....
